

Laura Gumbiner, M.S.Ed, M.A.

Clinical Psychology Extern

*Master of Science in Educational Psychology, Indiana University
Master of Arts in Counseling Psychology, Northwestern University
Bachelor of Arts in Psychology, Judson University*

Laura Gumbiner is a clinical psychology extern at Florissa. She is a doctoral candidate in School Psychology at Indiana University (IU). She earned her master's degree in Educational Psychology while at IU, and a master's degree in Counseling Psychology from Northwestern University. For the past six years, she has taught psychology and educational courses in higher education. She has also developed her psychological and psychoeducational assessment skills and has provided individual and group therapy to children and families.

Laura has trained in various settings during her graduate experiences, including public schools, a community mental health center, and a medically-based neurobehavioral center. Her assessment and treatment approach is based on a developmental and systemic view of children. She works to integrate individual dynamics with family and community factors. She has experience with childhood and adolescent concerns, including depression, anxiety, trauma, learning difficulties, behavior issues, eating disorders, and autism-spectrum disorder. It is important to Laura to approach each case from a multicultural lens, advocating for the best outcome for children, their families and their educational setting.
